Some Random Landscape Thoughts

If grass could talk, it probably wouldn't have anything nice to say about summer. Not only does summer pack an extra punch of sun and heat; but it also takes away a lot of your time because of the additional yard activity. How you take care of your lawn in the spring (which is the season we are currently in) will determine how well your yard looks in the summer.

Have your lawn treated in the spring :

Aerating will help your grass recover from winter and prepare it for summer. Applying lawn fertilizer will boost grass health and make it more resilient to the summer heat. Spreading a pre-emergent weed product in the spring will prevent those annoying summer weeds.

Check your lawn for flaws before summer arrives:

Reseeding any bare spots is a quick renovation for the grass. Adjusting sprinkler nozzles and making sure your irrigation system is working correctly will fix any brown patches. Raking up leaves and layers of dead grass will allow more sun, water, and nutrients to reach the soil and root system.

Summer is the season of outdoor fun, so take time this spring to prepare your lawn for those upcoming summer picnics, barbeques, lawn sports, and parties.

Lawn Mower Care

Lawn mowers should be tuned up once a year.

Clean out dirt or build up off of the engine parts and change the oil.

Keep the mower blades sharp to give your grass a clean cut.

Beautify Your Yard

Give your planters a new look this summer.

Plant some seasonal flowers or shrubs for an extra pop of color.

Add mulch for a clean and fresh look. A layer of mulch will help retain moisture and keep your plants hydrated.
